TORAT

Parashat Va'etchanan

HAMELECH

Mitsvot at Marah

In this week's parashah, the Aseret HaDibrot are repeated, with slight variation. One variation is the reference to this that the mitzva of Kibud Av V'eim – honoring one's parents – was already given prior to Matan Torah, at a place called Marah. Why is that significant?

Sefer HaChinuch explains that the mitzvah of Kibud Av V'eim is primarily based upon the concept of hakarat hatov, acknowledgment of benevolence and an attempt to reciprocate.

That being so, someone who feels that his parents did not provide for him his basic needs as a child and youngster, may feel not so compelled to honor them. That is why, explains Rav Meir Simcha HaKohen of Dvinsk in his sefer Meshech Chochma, this mitzvah was given to us at Marah. What happened at Marah? We were hungry and thirsty. We were in a desert. We had no homeland. We were the epitome of "the wandering Jew". Our parents were helpless as well. Father could not provide his young with bread, nor could mothers give them water. We were all in Hashem's Hands. He alone supplied our needs, in Marah and throughout our forty year sojourn. The mothers did not do laundry either. Their clothes grew with them and the Clouds of Glory provided all laundering and ironing needs.

And there, yes there, exactly under those very conditions, we were commanded to honor our folks. To show you that, yes, under normal circumstances, the mitzvah is intertwined with hakorat hatov. Intertwined, yes; dependent, no. So even if, over the course of time, there will be some youngsters or older ones who feel not so indebted to their parents, that is irrelevant. The mitzvah of kibud horim is just as applicable, as it was given first at Marah, when our parents barely did a thing for us.

Goodness

Another variation is the added phrase, "lema'an yitav lach" – "in order that He should be benevolent unto you". In Parashat Yitro, we were only guaranteed longevity for fulfilling this mitzvah. Here, we are guaranteed "goodness". This includes all forms of goodness: wealth, health, prosperity, dignity, etc.

Even longevity and wisdom are means of receiving deserved honor, thus it is fitting reward for those who afford respect to their parents.

A Gold Mine

Honor your parents and your children will honor you. They will see the role model.

Realize that honoring parents is simply a mitzvah, no less than eating matzah on Pesach and taking the four Species on Sukkot. Each time you service them, another mitzvah. Don't delay! If your parents are around, you are in a gold mine! You can pick up valuable treasures all the time, if you just pay attention to their needs and wants.

Stones and Cows

Dama ben Netina was a non-Jew who lived in Ashkelon, in the times of the second Beit Hamikdash. A precious stone was lost from the priestly vestments. The Sages were sent to procure a replacement. They were directed to Dama who was known to broker such stones. Indeed, he had the item, but he refused to wake up his sleeping father, despite the outrageous price offered. Only after his father awoke on his own did Dama pursue the Sages and sell the stone for the first price offered.

Hashem rewarded him by having his cow give birth to a red heifer, which he sold to the Sages, for the highest price that they had offered for the stone, thereby receiving his reward in this world.

The Gemara retells us this story in order to impress upon us the importance of Kibud Av V'Eim, including avoiding causing them any pain, discomfort or disturbance. Additionally, we gain a glimpse of the unfathomable reward for this mitzvah.

Sage Counsel

Says the Pele Yo'eitz: Too many people these days are lax in this mitzvah. Instead of honoring parents, they tend to disgrace them. They do not do as they are told. They act in a way which brings disgrace to the parents. As they act to their parents, their children will act towards them. We can never do this mitzvah properly, as hard as we may try. We still must do our best.

Yaakov Avinu missed out on 22 years of honoring his parents. He paid for that dearly, with the disappearance of his beloved Yosef. For how long? 22 years! Exactly!

Yosef Hatsaddik was meant to live until 120. Why were ten years cut off of his life? Because he allowed others to refer to his father Yaakov as his [Yosef's] servant ten times and he did not protest.

Too many children these days simply believe themselves to be so much wiser than their parents. Therefore they look down upon their parents. They should be made aware that much wisdom is acquired with age and experience. These youngsters think they know better, but... they don't.

People spend so much money on mitsvot such as petichat haheichal and sandaka'ut. They believe them to be great segulot for prosperity and success. Little do they realize that all the segulot in the world cannot compare to the Torah's guarantee, "Honor you father and your mother... so that your days will be lengthened and so that it should be good for you."

A Pair of Tefillin

One day a grandfather came to visit his grandchildren. He noticed an interesting phenomenon. The mother asked one of the children to take out the garbage.

The child responded 'why me'.

The same response was heard from the next two children. The fourth child was already a bit wiser. He said, "Let's have a raffle and see who comes out."

The grandfather was devastated. He called the children together and rolled up his sleeve. "Do you see this number on my arm?" he asked. "As you know, I was in Auschwitz. Now I want to tell you how I got there.

When the Nazis yimach shemam took over our city, they gathered everyone to a certain place, between two trains. They were telling some people to go to one and others to go to the other one. They sent my father to the train on the right and my mother with all the children to the train on the left. At the time, we had no idea where either train was going. We later found out that men were taken to work and the others were taken to die al kiddush Hashem.

"I was squashed with my mother and siblings on the Death Train. My mother opened her small bag of belongings and noticed my father's tefillin. Immediately, she turned to me and said, 'Quick take this to Father and come right back.'

"Without hesitation, I dashed from train to train. The place was full of Nazi soldiers. Somehow no one noticed me. The other train was also full, so it took some time until I found my father. Just as I found him, the doors of the train closed. At the time, I was petrified. I later found out that this mitzvah of listening to my mother to bring tefillin to my father saved my life.

"So when your mother asks you to take out the garbage do not delay. Jump at the opportunity! If the Torah says that kibud av v'eim lengthens your days, remember me and believe it!"

Five Lirots

A young man named Pinchus was diagnosed with a serious illness. Doctors told him that his days were numbered. He decided to get a bracha from the Chazon Ish. Public transportation those days to Bnei Brak was no simple matter. He decided to rent a car for five lirot.

He arrived at the Chazon Ish and began telling his story. After listening quietly, the Chazon Ish asked, "Do you have parents?"

Surprised at the question, Pinchus answered, "Yes."

"How much did it cost you to get here?"

"Five lirot."

"And when was the last time you did something for your parents for even one lira?"

Pinchus thought hard. He could not remember.

The Chazon Ish continue, "You spent five lirot to get here, not knowing if I would be home, if I would let you in, if I would bless you. And the Torah says that for honoring parents, you receive longevity."

Pinchus got the message. He began doing more for his parents and lived past ninety in good health.

Oy, Reb Chaim!

One day, Rebbetzin Barzam told her father, the Steipler, "Chaim pulled a muscle in his back."

The Steipler immediately went to the home of his son, Rav Chaim Kanievsky, and told him, "Lie down and pick up your shirt."

Without hesitation, Reb Chaim wen to lie down and picked up his shirt. The Steipler came and sat next to him and put some oil on his hands. He then massaged Reb Chaim's back for several minutes. Then he stood up and said, "Rest for a few hours."

Reb Chaim wanted to walk his father to the door, but he had to follow his father's orders so he remained in bed.

The Steipler returned home and Rebbetzin Barzam asked him where he had gone. When he told her, she said, "I meant my son-in-law, Reb Chaim Kluft! Not my brother, Rav Chaim Kanievsky!"

The Steipler immediately went back to Reb Chaim's house to tell him that he could get out of bed. He knew that Reb Chaim would continue to lie as his father had instructed even though he had no idea why his father told him to do that.

Father Comes First

Moshe Volkin learned in Yeshivat Mir. He was so excited to receive a ticket to go to Meron with his friends for Lag BaOmer. When he told his father about it, his father (Reb Aharon Volkin from Lakewood) said, "Come with me to visit Zaidy. Then we will go to Meron in the middle of the night and return to Yerushalayim for Shabbat."

Young Moshe had already made plans to spend Shabbat in Tzefat with his friends. But at his father's behest he immediately changed his plans. He went to visit his grandfather and only left close to midnight. As they approached Meron, police stopped them and told them that Meron was closed to all traffic. They must turn back.

Only in the morning did Moshe hear the horrifying news of the death of his two close friends, D. Steinmetz and Y.Y. Kahan, along with tens of others who had come to daven there and participate in the festivities.

Moshe then realized that Kibud Av V'eim saved his life and lengthened his days. R' Aharon also commented, "I thought I was going for the sake of my father. In the end, it also saved my son."

Here and Now

In conclusion, a person should realize that the mitsvah of kibud av v'eim is a tremendous opportunity. It should not be viewed as a burden, but as a great privilege. Nor should it be postponed, as in, "Ma, I'll do it later."

A person should do whatever he can to make his parents comfortable, and avoid doing that which brings them distress.

A home in which kibud av v'eim is a prominent theme is more likely to operate smoothly and children raised therein more often turn out emotionally healthy and become sources of pride to their parents.

Special attention must be given to new needs of aging parents. Just remember – all you do for your parents, you will get back, in this world and the next.
